Launched in 2020, the Nations League was created to give national teams regular, meaningful games. Prior to its inception, many matches were either high-cost friendlies or sparse qualifiers, leaving teams without a structured calendar. By grouping teams into three leagues—A, B, and C—CONCACAF ensures that every squad plays opponents of similar strength, increasing competitiveness and fan engagement across the region. League A houses the top 12 teams, split into two groups of six. Each side plays home and away matches against the others in its group. League B contains the next 12 teams, also arranged in two groups of six, following the same round-robin format. League C features the remaining 16 teams divided into four groups of four. These clubs face each other twice, home and
