for a single-day display. When parents tape the scene to a fridge door or a hallway wall, the novelty wears off as soon as the next meal is served. The key is to treat each print as a modular piece rather than a permanent fixture. Plan a rotation. Print several scenes on cardstock, then schedule a new tableau every two to three days. Use removable adhesive. Small poster-tack strips or reusable mounting squares keep the paper flat without leaving residue. Involve the children. Let them choose which scene appears next; ownership fuels enthusiasm. Standard printer paper often absorbs ink unevenly, making fine details look washed out. For a crisp holiday look, select a heavier, matte cardstock of at least 80 lb (120 gsm). The extra weight prevents curling and provides a sturdy backing for tiny props like stickers or glitter.
