from turning into a paperwork nightmare. Below are real-world scenarios and the decisive actions that keep your protected time off truly protected. Federal law grants up to 12 weeks of unpaid, job-protected leave for serious health conditions, but Colorado adds layers that can either expand or shrink that safety net. Colorado's Healthy Families and Workplaces Act (HFWA) effective Jan. 2024 covers employees of employers with 21 or more workers, providing paid sick leave that can be used for the same reasons FMLA allows. Colorado Anti-Discrimination Act (CADA) requires employers to treat pregnancy-related leave as a medical condition, not a separate category. Employer size threshold only businesses with 50+ employees fall under federal FMLA; smaller Colorado firms may still be bound by state law, creating a hybrid compliance landscape.
