sketch can stall a meeting as participants scramble to decipher minimalistic script. By expanding the size and shape of each character, the big bubble. The core idea is straightforward: replace standard block or cursive strokes with a series of overlapping circles that form each letter. This approach yields three immediate benefits—greater readability, consistent spacing, and reduced strain on the hand because the motion mimics natural drawing of curves rather than sharp angles. Choose a baseline. Draw a light horizontal line to serve as the bottom of every bubble letter. Sketch the first circle. For letters such as O or C, start with a single circle that sits on the baseline and extends upward. Add supporting circles. Combine two or three circles to create vertical stems for B, D, or P, ensuring each circle overlaps the previous one by about 20 %.
