to add a Courts across the United States are wrestling with fragmented schedules, duplicated entries, and last-minute conflicts that slow down case processing. A single, cloud-based calendar that pulls together docket dates, hearing rooms, and judge availability can cut administrative overhead by up to 30 %, free staff for substantive work, and give litigants clearer expectations. Below is a step-by-step look at how to move from a patchwork of spreadsheets to one unified system that actually works. When each department maintains its own timetable, the same hearing can be booked in two rooms, or a judge may be double-booked without anyone noticing until the day of the session. A unified platform offers a single source of truth, ensuring that every entry is visible to clerks, judges, and attorneys alike. The result is fewer rescheduled hearings, fewer “œcourt”in”the”air” notices, and a smoother flow of cases through the docket.
