Netflix's internal taxonomy categorizes each series by genre, sub-genre, release year, and viewer metrics. This mirrors the way the Business Index tags entities by filing status, registration date, and industry code. By replicating this method, you can quickly locate a show that matches specific research criteria. Just as a business researcher might filter by "active status" and "corporate filings," a viewer can filter by "high-risk narrative" and "viewer rating above 8.0." The resulting shortlist aligns directly with the researcher's need for high-value data points. The series "You" exemplifies a structured storyline that can be parsed into discrete data fields, much like a business entity's profile. Each episode introduces a new target, a set of investigative steps, and a conclusion, providing a repeatable template for content analysis. Identify the "entity" - In "You," the entity is the love interest; in the business index, it's the corporation. Track "metadata" -
